

Recap of 1/10/21 message (Joe Ricchuiti – Psalm 90):

1. Psalm 90 is the oldest of the Psalms. It was written by Moses.

2. The theme of Psalm 90, in the words of Warren Wiersbe is: "In spite of the burdens of life and the brevity of life, life is worth living when you trust the Lord."

3. We must come to grips with our mortality.

-In light of life's brevity we should not take our days for granted, we should number our days (make good use of the days God gives us) and apply our hearts to living wisely, skillfully in accord with God's Word (vv. 1-12)

-In light of God's compassion, we can have meaning in our lives, we can have joy in place of sorrow, and we can

Have success instead of failure (vv. 13-17).

4. Principles for living wisely, prudently, each day:

-Realize how brief life is, Psalm 90:12; James 4:13,14.

-“We are always complaining that our days are few and acting as though there would be no end to them.” (Seneca)

-Make spiritual commitment a priority, especially in your youth, Ecclesiastes 12:1.

-Put God first in your youth.

-Make use of opportunities while we can.

-Understand the priority of the eternal over the temporal 1 Corinthians 7:29-31

-We must live for the eternal rather than the passing (the temporal, the temporary).

-We are being fitted for heaven, we must commit ourselves to eternal values.

-We must not get sidetracked by sin, Ephesians 5:15-16

-There is no time to waste time on the old way of living.

-We must pay attention to personal behavior, to live and speak wisely, Ephesians 5:15,16

-We must live in the light, reflect the light.

-We must guard our public life, Colossians 4:5,6.

-Our walk must be consistent with our talk.

-We must live in such a way as to attract and convict non-believers
